

 cars and trucks
ninety nine

Any color you want as long as it's black. That was the Model T, and it held the key to Henry Ford's vision of affordable transportation for all America. You can't help but wonder what Henry would think if he could see his company's products on the eve of the 21st century. Cars and minivans people practically live in. Trucks and vans that handle our toughest jobs. Sport utilities that take folks places they could never go. All with a reputation for quality, safety and durability. What would he think?

Well, seeing as how he always said machines should exist to make people's lives better, he'd probably figure things were right on track.

Oh, maybe a little overboard on the colors.

mustang

Reinterpreting an American icon can be a daunting task. But with power, performance and styling, this 1999 redefinition of the legendary Mustang welds together past and present with the heat of driving excitement.

Horsepower is up to 190 in the V6 (260 in the V8).

Road feel is better, too. And the new look, which commemorates 35 galloping years, is all Mustang.
